Recommended by: Laurel Sutton, founding partner of Catchword in Oakland. She is the firm's senior project director as well as its linguistic director.

Business: Catchword, founded in 1998, provides a wide range of naming and branding services ú such as company, product, and services naming, and strategic brand development ú to clients from start-ups to Fortune 50 companies.

Why use site: "It's the best source for the meaning, history, and pronunciation of almost any word in English. When we recommend a new name to a client, we need to know everything about it, and the OED provides all that information quickly and intuitively."

What's on site: "Everything you find in the print version of the OED and more. Each word has a full definition, etymology, supporting quotations, and a date chart showing earliest use in English."

Accolades: "Although the subscription is a little pricey ($550/year), it's well worth the unlimited access to this most thorough of dictionaries, which you can access from any Web browser. It's easy to navigate; the linked entries make browsing related words a breeze. The search function allow you to look for words in definitions and etymologies as well as by entry."
